How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

The Fund navigated a dynamic market environment marked by policy uncertainty, geopolitical events, and sharp rotations. Throughout the period, the Fund’s systematic, trend-following approach provided a disciplined framework for managing risk and responding to rapidly shifting conditions. In the third quarter of 2024, falling inflation and lower Treasury yields fueled expectations of Fed rate cuts. Markets experienced heightened volatility driven by a sharp rotation out of large-cap technology and into cyclical sectors. During this period, the HCM Pivot Point® generated brief tactical sell signals on leveraged ETF holdings in response to the weak July jobs report and the Bank of Japan’s unexpected rate hike in late July, which sparked a partial unwinding of the carry trade. While the Fund reduced exposure during the downturn, the HCM-BuyLine® remained positive, indicating the broader trend was intact. The Fund quickly reentered the leveraged ETF positions, allowing it to participate in the recovery throughout the rest of the calendar year.

Entering 2025, markets were impacted by renewed trade policy uncertainty and intermittent tariff announcements. These developments led to sell signals from the HCM-BuyLine®. In response, the Fund tactically reduced exposure and raised cash prioritizing capital preservation amid unpredictable policy shifts. While rebounds occurred shortly after exits, the Fund remained focused on protecting investors from sustained downturns.

By April, conditions began to stabilize. The Fund maintained a patient stance, holding elevated cash while waiting on confirmation of an uptrend. In early May, the HCM-BuyLine® turned positive, triggering a systematic reentry into equities.

While the Fund underperformed for the period, it maintained a disciplined process of shifting between equity exposure and defensive cash based on trend signals. The Fund captured market strength during the latter part of 2024, but sharp reversals in early 2025 led to whipsaw effects that detracted from performance.
